

Considering Med School? The Air Force Could Help Pay.

Medical school is expensive, but the Air Force has a scholarship program that could cover a huge chunk of the cost – potentially over $250,000!

*The Air Force Health Professions Scholarship Program (HPSP) pays for your tuition, books, and most fees. On top of that, you get a monthly stipend ($2,999) and a sign-on bonus of $20,000. That puts nearly $135K in your pocket while you're in med school. They offer 2, 3, and 4-year scholarships.

So, what's the catch? In exchange for this generous support, you commit to serving as a physician in the Air Force after you finish your residency. Think of it as trading debt for service.

What are the perks? Besides having your education paid for, you're guaranteed a physician position after training, earn a salary during your service, and can retire with a pension after 20 years.

Are you eligible? Here's a quick rundown:

- U.S. Citizen
- MCAT taken or scheduled
- Accepted to, enrolled in, or applying to a U.S. medical or osteopathic school
- Under 35 at time of application

Important Note: There may be other requirements, so it's best to talk to a recruiter.

Want to learn more? If you want to know more, you can call, text, or send me an email (see contact information below).

You can also visit the Air Force website for more details about healthcare careers: <https://www.airforce.com/careers/specialty-careers/healthcare>

This is a huge decision, so do your research and see if the Air Force HPSP is the right path for you. It could be a great way to achieve your medical career goals without being buried under student debt while serving your country.

I look forward to hearing from you!

TSgt Robert P. Williams
Air Force Officer Accessions Recruiter
4030 Wake Forest Rd, Suite 205
Raleigh NC 27609
Cell: 919-799-0667
<https://www.airforce.com/careers/specialty-careers/healthcare>